Digicel Stars was an emotional roller coaster this week, full of ups and downs and WOWs.

First things first: let's start with eliminations. I could barely watch as the names of the last seven contestants were called and when it was all over, the judges weren't the only ones sad to see Shaffique, Nikesha McDowell and Neisha Guy leaving for good.

I'll miss Super Cool's enthusiasm, Nikesha's powerful vocals and – most of all – Neisha's flawless performances.

I'm sure we'll see them again, though. They have way too much talent to quit now.

It seemed like I wasn't the only one shaken up by the eliminations because every performer stepped things up a notch this week.

Most Improved awards go to Xtreme Breakers, who did it up 'Gangnam Style' with a fun and innovative routine and Shazeena Ramsumair who has WAY too much stage presence for a 17-year-old!

Glenda was in tears after her passionate performance of Miley Cyrus' 'The Climb' and ... I might have gotten a bit misty-eyed myself.

Aside from that, Kela Bedassie raised goose bumps as usual when she hit the crescendo of Be Grateful and Daniel King rocked the crowd with a smooth rendition of Jah Cure's That Girl.

Trust me when I tell you, that guy is definitely a star in the making.

Meanwhile, I think I might have a crush on Iziah after his soulful performance of I Need You Now.

I know he's a gospel singer but, whenever he hits the stage, I think of Usher ... which happened to be exactly what Glenda said about him this week, LOL.

D' Gift's performance was so expressive and engaging that no one really cared about the fact that they weren't always in sync.

I don't know where Curt Alexander and Takyha Springer get that chemistry, but if they keep it coming they might just take home the top prize.

Last but not least was my favourite performance of the night: Delissa Wilson-George.

She sold Mandisa's Not Guilty well enough to leave every member of the audience (me included) catching our breath.

After Sunday night, we've got a tough job on our hands, T&T.

Every single performer gave their all ... I think I'm going to have to buy a few extra phone cards this week to cast all my votes!
